Review by Jeffrey S. Evans (printed on back cover):

Joan Kaiser's in-depth study presents important and groundbreaking research on more than twenty-five glass manufacturers producing blown and pressed wares in South Boston during the nineteenth century. By meticulously combing through vast quantities of original source materials and examining thousands of glass fragments, she is able to establish compelling new origins and attributions of the products of these firms. With this much-anticipated volume, Kaiser delivers an indispensable addition to the scholarship and study of nineteenth century American Glass.
